I could write a book on jizz and have people read it intently, trying to figure out what is happening.

To understand my poetry u must have a sharp mind and intently pay attention.

— Petrucci

Forward

There are minor poets, and there are major poets. Contemporary poetry has been reduced to a manufactured spectacle determined largely by empty-headed and wooden University (wo)men who lack the true sense and feeling of a poet. For many years now, we have been privileged to observe a poet-in-the-raw. On Undernet, an Internet Relay Chat network, in #vancouver-free, Peturcci holds forth and dispenses poetry in a manner reminiscent of the poets of old.

He is no Milton; he does not work in blank verse, and his delivery is more in the bardic tradition of extemporaneous retelling of lore, rather than vain repetition of text from page. So much the better. Petrucci's lexical palate is much more sophisticated, less stodgy, less dogmatically focused on form, more effused with the spirit of our time. His focus is largely on what he terms "jizzropes" or "enriched white life."

As no preface will adequately prepare you for what is to come, let us say this: Petrucci is an artist of first rate, and, like many great artists, he may not be fully appreciated until he is dead. May those of us with "sharp minds" who "intently pay attention" be blessed with many years of enjoyment before such time; but to all you who do not see the beauty contained within these pages, it is easy to find uglyness; to find beauty is the true hallmark of dignity and honor.
